

How much does one ton of fusion spliced optical cable cost in Southeast Asia

Summary of Content

The estimated cost of one ton of fusion-spliced optical fiber cable in Southeast Asia ranges roughly from $50,000 to $200,000, depending on fiber type, cable construction, and splicing complexity.

Cable Material Costs

Fiber optic cable prices vary by type and construction. Single-mode outdoor cables typically cost $0.10–$0.50 per meter, while multimode or armored cables can reach $0.30–$1.50 per meter. A ton of cable roughly corresponds to 10,000–15,000 meters, depending on fiber count and jacket material. Using these figures, the raw material cost for one ton of cable can range from $10,000 to $22,500 for standard single-mode outdoor cable, and up to $150,000–$200,000 for high-count armored or specialty cables.

Fusion Splicing Costs

Fusion splicing adds labor and equipment costs. Typical fusion splicing costs are $50–$150 per splice point, with large projects benefiting from volume discounts. A high-fiber-count cable (e.g., 144 fibers) will require more splices per closure, increasing total splicing costs. For one ton of cable, splicing labor can add $5,000–$30,000, depending on fiber count, site conditions, and technician rates.
