

Primary Box Optical Cable Distribution Box

Summary of Content

A Primary Box Optical Cable Distribution Box (FDB) is a passive enclosure that securely splices, terminates, and distributes optical fibers from feeder cables to multiple subscriber connections.

Function and Role

A primary optical distribution box serves as an intermediate node in fiber networks, particularly in FTTH (Fiber-to-the-Home) or FTTB (Fiber-to-the-Building) deployments. Its main functions include:

- Splicing and termination of incoming feeder fibers to pigtails or patch cables.
- Distribution of optical signals to multiple subscriber endpoints.
- Mechanical protection for delicate fiber splices and connectors.
- Organization of fiber routing to maintain proper bend radius and prevent signal loss ( ).

Components

Typical FDBs contain:

- Splice trays or cassettes for fiber splicing and storage.
- Adapters and connectors (LC, SC, E2000®, ST) for signal transmission.
- Cable routing guides to manage incoming and outgoing fibers.
